STATEMENT REFERRED TO IN REPLY TO LOK SABHA STARRED QUESTION NO. 65 FOR 22ND OCTOBER, 2008

Pradhan Mantri Swasthya Suraksha Yojana (PMSSY) envisages setting up of AIIMS-like institutions and upgradation of medical college institutions in order to provide tertiary healthcare services and also quality medical education in the country.

In the first phase of PMSSY, six AIIMS-like institutions are being set up, one each in the States of Bihar (Patna), Chattisgarh (Raipur), Madhya Pradesh (Bhopal), Orissa (Bhubaneshwar), Rajasthan (Jodhpur) and Uttaranchal (Rishikesh), based on various socio-economic indicators like human development index, literacy rate, population below poverty line and per capita income and health indicators like population to bed ratio, prevalence rate of serious communicable diseases, infant mortality rate etc.

In addition, 13 existing Government medical college institutions are being upgraded in terms of infrastructure and equipments. List of institutions being upgraded is annexed.

Proposals were received from three States and one Union Territory for setting up new AIIMS like institutions. However, in view of resource constraints, it is proposed to establish only two more AIIMS-like institutions in two State. Besides it is proposed to upgrade five existing Government medical college institutions during second phase of PMSSY.
